European Management Association EMA

European Management Association was established in 1950 as CECIOS - European Management Council the European Chapter of CIOS - The World Management Council. It is an independent, professional NGO; the association is non - profit, non - governmental, non - political and non - religious international organization. EMA has members from most European countries, which include general management associations and institutes, universities all of whom support the mission of EMA in their respective country. EMA has partner organizations in other continents that support the mission of EMA in their respective regions of the world.

EMA is an active network bringing together management professionals and practitioners from across Europe and focuses on all managers within European countries, but especially younger managers, whether in multi - national organizations or small and medium - sized enterprises. Association participates in pan - European projects, with the support of funding from the European Commission, develops and promotes broad, but comprehensive pan - European standards of competence for managers. EMA aims at the sustainability of management and organizations, and promoting the theory and practice of good corporate citizenship.

European University

European University, as an educational and scientific institution, in cooperation with its members, accomplishes projects for people's better living and business development worldwide.

Strategic projects are given priority in Euro-Atlantic integration programs and development of multinational and translational companies.

Europe is a multicultural and multi-lingual environment including over 40 countries with 70 different languages.

The economy of European Union member states is an unavoidable factor in European economy.

With the enlargement of the European Union and the adoption of European Constitution, the dream of integration processes and bringing together all European countries and nations will come true.

The Sales Manager Academy SMA

The Sales Manager Academy (SMA) can draw on nearly 30 years of experience in adult education. It developed from the Service Management Seminars at the Faculty of Economy in Vienna, which have provided practice-oriented training for managers since 1980s. At present, the SMA has over 1,000 active students and already more than 580 graduates. The aim of education is explicitly practical education and training, which will enable the graduates to achieve the basis for a significant improvement of their professional skills and to create opportunities for advancement in leadership positions.
